Paul works in Frankfurt for an international business magazine. He writes reports on the situation of the money markets in Europe. He has to travel a lot for his job in order to get the necessary information, but he certainly doesn't mind travelling. Actually, he met his future wife, Laura, during a flight from London to Rome. She was sitting in the seat next to his when an accident happened. Paul was drinking a glass of red wine with his meal when the glass fell out of his hand on to the new dress Laura had just bought in London. Of course, she felt terribly upset. But after Paul had said "sorry" at least ten times, she began to feel a little happier and by the time they landed in Rome they had become quite friendly. A few months later they got married and moved into a new three-room flat in Frankfurt. A few evenings ago Paul got a late telephone call from his magazine. They wanted to send him to Tokyo for three months to write regular reports about the banks there. He really didn't know how to tell his wife about the offer. In the end they went to an expensive restaurant for a meal and Paul told her. Laura laughed – her company wanted to send her to Tokyo, too, where they had an office. She hadn't found the right time to tell Paul about the offer they had made!

- 116 Paul doesn't like travelling.
- 117 Paul had an accident with some wine.
- 118 Paul and Laura only became friendly after they landed in Rome.
- 119 Paul's employers wanted to send him to Tokyo to write one or two reports.
- 120 Laura had the same problem that Paul had.
