Paul and Laura decided to keep their flat in Frankfurt while they were in Japan. Fortunately, Laura had a friend who wanted somewhere to live and they offered her the flat until they needed it again. There was still one problem they had to solve and that was to do with Paul's parents. Mr and Mrs Spencer had retired and had recently gone to live in a village in the country .Paul and Laura were worried about them. Although they were both in good health, Paul's parents always found it difficult to make friends. When Laura and her husband phoned them and mentioned their plans for the future, neither of Paul's parents said very much. Laura and Paul decided to leave for Japan only when Paul's parents had found some new hobbies and interests. One day Laura travelled to the village where Mr and Mrs Spencer lived. She hadn't told them about her visit because she wanted to see for herself what it was like there. She arrived in the middle of a party, which Mr and Mrs Spencer had organized for the people in the village, many of whom had been very active for years in business, too, but now they were also looking for new interests and new friends. They all belonged to a club and met regularly. They played cards, organized trips and even arranged evening classes, where they learnt languages and useful information about hobbies like gardening and taking photos. Paul's parents laughed when they heard that their daughter-in-law was worried. "Don't worry about us," they said. "We'll manage -and you' re still only a phone call away, aren't you?"

- 146 Laura and Paul's flat would be empty until they returned.
- 147 Paul's parents were still working.
- 148 Neither of Paul's parents were ill.
- Laura didn't tell Mr and Mrs Spencer that she wanted to visit them.
- 150 There were plenty of activities in the village for retired people.
